mind, is the latest acquisition of the coterie of New York woman wage earners. She is Mrs. Annie Leon, who since the death of her husband last week has grappled with the problem of sarning her own living, by taking charge of the barber shop which her husband left her as a legacy.

Mrs. Leon has black eyes and a clear skin; incidentally she has a leaning toward the study of phrenology and physi-ognomy. She says there are great gifts in "tonsorial art," and judging from the way trade is flourishing at the little shop at No. 165 East Eighty-sixth street. the combination is working wonders. When Mrs. Leon cries out "Next" she doesn't have to wait long for a willing oustomer.

"The first thing I do when a man gets "The first thing I do when a man gets in the chair," she announced to an Evening World reporter this morning, it is necessary to read character to be a successful barber. I shaved lots of men and gave numerous hair cuts when my husband ran the shop, but now I mean to become the smost scientific haircutter in New York. "I tell you, in order to be successful, you have not only to be scientific, but artistic. Just think of the possibilities in the human face. Let me get how of a man who doesn't look well and I can fix him up by giving him a good haircut, and making his mustache go the right way. There are all types of faces, and if a man must wear a mustache let him train the ends of it up. I don't believe in mustaches from the sanitary point of view, but when it adds to a man's appearance let him keep the ends turned up.

"I can't stand for whiskers, but I

"I have two small children to support," said Mrs. Leon. "so this business of mine is no fad or fancy. It is a serious proposition and I mean to win out. By my facial study I expect to become one of the leading barbers in New York."

She believes, not without reason, that men who can have their features studied, their hair cut with some regard for their phrenological peculiarities, to the accompaniment of bay rum, lather and a soft, womanly touch, will crowd the little shop to the limit.

"I certainly will give them their money's worth," said the energetic barber, "and that's what everybody wants."

height, the distance to the nearest hotel where man and bast can be accommodated."

Assemblyman McCullagh left for New York before he could be questioned as to the measure, but several of his associates called the act "a bird."

State Engineer and Surveyor Bond said:

"The scheme is a good one if a uniform kind of sign post can be decided upon, because otherwise they will prove an eyesore."

Assemblyman Hinson said: "You don't don't need a sign post in the Bowery for there are guerillas there to guide you."
